Employers seek employees with a combination of academic, technical, and essential skills. Higher education readily addresses the attainment of technical and educational skills through established educational programs; however, essential skills curriculum is sometimes missing or falls short of achieving the outcome demanded in the workforce.

Barton Community College embraces the inclusion of essential skills training across all of its educational programs. Efforts are led by a college committee, implemented by faculty members, and monitored by advisory boards. The college included an essential skills curriculum in career and technical programs during the 2011-2012 school year, and has expanded the curriculum offering college wide during the 2020-21 school year. At the end of each academic year, program leaders report on use of skill discussions, projects, and activities in their classrooms and labs. These outcomes provide the feedback necessary to monitor the efficacy of the essential skills curriculum.

The college, in partnership with National Network of Business & Industry Associations, author of "Common Employability Skills", have integrated the Network's findings into this guide which serves as support for the continued use of essential skills curriculum college wide. The purpose of the Essential Skills project is to raise student awareness and to facilitate learning that translates into workplace success.

Barton is on track, and in many ways, ahead of recognizing the significance of these skills. We owe it to our students to not only teach them classroom skills, but also to create an awareness of essential skills which fosters their understanding of the critical importance of these skills in the workplace.
