

Military Certificate's

The original certificate in Military Technology which had 3 areas of focus was developed over 4 years ago. It was developed at the request of the military, with Fort Riley being the lead partner. The certificate was developed based on needed technical work skills for entry level as well as skills and credentialing required for advancement. The advisory board has recommended a realignment of the certificate into three separate certificates. The courses in this certificate were recommended by members of Barton's Military Advisory Board.

With the focus and tempo of the Army changing over the last 2 years and the focus on career advancement the

Rational

Changes in the focus and tempo of the Army have created a need for service members to not only obtain technical skills and credentials but also requiring degree completion to be competitive for promotion to Non-Commissioned Officer (NCO). With the development of the AAS in Technical studies being approved for use the advisory board recommended the separation of the certificate into 3 distinct certificates aligned with the areas of concentration in the old certificate. These changes include offering alternate classes that allow service member in various positions and levels to complete 1 or more of the certificates to fulfill the requirements of completing the AAS in Technical Studies.
